

Coming to Grips With the Real YOU (Continued)

Here's where the rubber meets the road: "We belong to the family of God, where we can find the truth about who we really are." Where else are you going to hear that our physical appearances are beautiful in God's sight, that we are wanted and appreciated, and because of Christ's righteousness we've been made righteous?

Lastly, once we have reconciled the first two questions, the third looms even larger. We are hard wired to want to know our purpose. We all desire to be significant, and to make our lives count long after we leave this world. When we get real about ourselves, we no longer just want to be known by our profession or even our family name which are temporal. We want to make an eternal difference based upon our unique design and interconnectedness in the Body of Christ.
