

Getting The Very Best From God (Continued)

There I found two groups: Conformists and non-conformists. The conformists seemed to embrace the world and everything in it. Their motto was: “I am a friend of sinners.” They took pleasure in “not wearing faith on their sleeve” so that their lives looked “conformed” to the world’s beliefs, ethics and values. The non-conformists seemed heaven-bent on making sure that they would ride out the evil influences of the world until Jesus came back. They created a Christian sub-culture (they only had Christian plumbers fix their leaky pipes, exclusively listened to Christian music, only read Christian books, and just hung out with Christian friends).
